Working hard, and it looks like having fun too, in Mr. Sauer’s Marine Biology class

Marine biology is the study of aquatic or marine life. Scientists in this field attempt to know, understand, research, and analyze the creatures and ecosystems that lie beneath the water’s surface. The secrets of the sea can help to do more than expand our knowledge of the earth’s systems. They can lead to discoveries in animal care, health, medicine, and other scientific fields.

This is a semester long science elective offered at North
